The banks now hold $109,942,250 in excess of the requirements of the 25 per cent, rule. Total sales of stocks Saturday were only 43,500 shares. There was hardly sufficient business done on the Stock Exchange Saturday to constitute a market, outside of New England, Western Union, Sugar, St. Paul and Louisville & Nashville, and of these the first-named alone fluctuated outside of a limit of % per cent. At the opening the prevailing tone was firmness, and prices were a small fraction higher, but there was little or no buying, and a slight reaction ensued, the market going down of its own weight, rather than by reason of any pressure to sell. It was not until the last half hour that the traders began selling New England, which for lack of support from any quarter broke 2% per cent., closing at the lowest figures touched. The drive at this stock induced, by the receipts of selling orders from Boston, the bears to make a demonstration in the hope of catching stop orders, but without much success. The general list was not materially affected by the break in New England and closed fairly firm. London houses bought moderately of St. Paul and Louisville & Nashville in the early dealings, and there was a covering movement in Sugar. Little or nothing was done in the grangers outside of St. Paul. Distilling and General Electric were entirely neglected. The liquidating sales made Friday in Western Union were not renewed, and there were evidences that an effort was being made to buy back the shares without raising the price materially. Compared with the final sales of Friday, the changes at the close were as a rule fractional. On the transactions of the week the most notable changes were advances of 15 tory with Easy Prices in Most Lines. The trade of the week closing yesterday was an improvement over the preceding weeks of the month, but not up to the volume of the corresponding week in 1893. The traveling salesmen who came in Friday night and yesterday report matters brightening somewhat, and the retail merchants are carrying so low stocks of goods that of necessity they must replenish them more or less. But they purchase largely on the hand-to-mouth policy. In prices changes during the week were few, and, in most cases, to lower figures. Poultry and butter are both weak and in light demand. Eggs are coming in freely, but with an increased demand. In the vegetable line an easy tone to prices is noticeable. Oranges and lemons are in good supply and steady. The drygoods houses had a fair week's business, but to sell large bills goods were offered on very small margins. The grocers seemingly have the lead, and some of them claim to be doing more business than in January, last year. The seed market is more active and prices easier. Hog products are moving well, and prices for some days have varied little. It has been an off week in the local grain market, with attendance on 'Change small and little life in the bidding. Prices East have not yet adjusted themselves to the advance in freight rates. There is an average local demand for corn and oats, but little is said about wheat. Track bids yesterday

HOW LONGSTREET SAVED LEE.

The Ex-Confederate Leader Answers Some Aspersions of Governor Jones.

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 27.—The Globe-Democrat prints the following under date of Gainesville, Ga.: Gen. James Longstreet, the ex-confederate leader, is highly incensed over the address delivered by Gov. Thomas G. Jones, of Alabama, before the Virginia division of the Army of Northern Virginia. In that speech, speaking of the closing days of the war, Governor Jones severely criticised General Longstreet. Speaking of the 2d of April, 1865, Governor Jones said: "For some reason, Longstreet did not perceive the weakening of the force in his front at the time of Ord's withdrawal, and, hence, had not moved over to the south side of the river, as instructed in that event." When questioned about such a movement and order. General Longstreet replied: "This is in keeping with the unsupported reckless statements of Benjamin Butler, Butler's Book' and Dabney H. Maurey, in his letter last summer, that I sought to displace General Lee and obtain supreme command. Some men write and talk of the grand army of Northern Virginia to lead people to infer want of vigilance and of conuct by myself. The real facts are that no such orders were given. General Lee and 1 were in close and constant communication by wire; letters and dispatches passed daily, and at times even hourly. He was better prepared to learn of the march of reinforcements by the enemy along his many miles of front than I to detect a night march by Ord from behind his works on the bank the river to cross to General Lee's south side, and march along his entire front to turn his right. Days before the move was made I wrote to suggest that it would be made, and suggested further that my trenches be left under General Ewell; the marines and local troops and noncombatants of Richmond should be conscripted and put in the trenches with the local soldiery; that my entire force, the divisions of Fields and Kershaw-Pickett's had been transferred long before-be drawn to the south side, with such other troops as were available for the service, organized into a moving column, to defend our right against the move so palpably pending. "The first call General Lee made upon me was by wire on the 1st of April, in the afternoon, for myself and one division to join him at Petersburg. In response, Fields was promptly ordered, and my quartermaster was sent to Richmond in advance to have the cars ready by the time the troops reached the depot. The lines were five or six miles in front of Kichmond. To economize time and accelerate transportation rode with the staff, an all-night ride, and reported to General Lee at early dawn of the 2d before he was out of bed and before any of the troops were landed at Petersburg. While issuing my orders to march the troops to Five borks a staff officer rapidly rode up and reported that his entire line was overrun, even to the front of Gen. Lee's headquarters. "As Governor Jones's address is being circulated in pamphlet he makes wanton display of dense ignorance or malice less excusable now that the records are accessible, tested by which infallible standard many of the lurid statements now and then appearing in addresses and lectures are veritable Munchausenisms and pure figments of a wild imagination." Major Waddell, speaking approvingly of what General Longstreet was saying, thus told how the latter saved General Lee from capture on the occasion referred to: Well do I remember that famous interview between General Lee and Longstreet. as Lee reclined on his bunk and Longstreet sat at the foot of his great chief. Day had just broken and General Lee was half sitting up in bed as General Longstreet galloped up from his all-night ride and, dismounting, sat on his commander's bunk. The Yankees had broken our lines and had surged up close to General Lee's headquarters, but there sat our two biggest generals perfectly imperturbable. Throwing a cloak over his splendid form, General Lee said at the tent door:

" t will try, General, responded General Longstreet. Summoning up a few staff officers Gen. Longstreet hastily gathered together a few regiments of General Benning's brigade. and with these Georgia soldiers he fought General Gibbon's entire army corps, holding them in check while General Lee gressed and rode off to direct the retreat to Five Forks. It was here that General Grant confidently expected to terminate the war, but with Longstreet turning at bay and stubbornly contesting every inch of ground, General Lee gathered his men and turned and struck Sheridan and Warren a fearful blow. Grant censured Warren for the affair at Five Forks, and Warren dled of a broken heart under the rebuke; but he was not to blame, for it was the At Baltimore Clearings. $1,839,933: bal. | Beans Choice hand-picked navy, $2@2.10 | genius of Lee shining out brilliantly in the Beans Choice hand-picked navy, $2@2.10 | agony of the great finale."

WHEAT HELD STEADY

In the Face of Considerable Pounding the Price Rose 1-8c.

Corn Was Weak All Day and Made a Small Decline, While Provisions Closed Firm and Higher.

CHICAGO, Jan. 27.-Wheat slowed up against a good deal of pounding in the pit and a vast amount of tongue hammering on the outside, to-day, and was till in good shape at 1/sc advance when time was called at the close. Corn acted weak and lost about 3-16c per bushel of its former value. Provisions averaged firmer and closed at slightly better prices. There was no indication that anything would occur to lift the wheat market out of the rut of the last two weeks. The routine news of the session was mostly bullish. The receipts at most points were light, the exports better than expected, the weather and crop news was favorable to buyers. Offsetting this was the whipped condition of the bulls, the doubt about the increase in stocks and the adverse prospects in France. The public cable was 1/2d lower for Liverpool, partly owing no doubt to the French resolution asking the sudden increase in the duty on grain. The decrease of 472,000 bushels in and affoat for Europe was disappointing. The increase in Australian stocks was nearly 2,000,000 bushels. Chicago stocks of wheat will increase again considerably. On the other hand, local receipts were but fifty-four cars; Northwestern receipts, 149 cars against 314 cars a year ago. Reports covering Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Kansas and Nebraska say that high winds have caused bare fields and damage to wheat likely to follow. This was confirmed by reports to the Modern Miller, St. Louis. The dispatches indicated that fifty boatloads of wheat worked for export at all points yesterday. But there was no enthusiasm and only a narrow market. The May price started at 63%@63%c, with an upturn to 63%c for a moment, a dip to 63%@63%c, and then little change for an hour following. The wheat trade got no help from any quarter late in the session and closed at the low point, 63%, or %c over last night. There was enough reaction in corn to entirely wipe out the advance of Wednesday and Thursday, the early sales 38%c, and off to 38c, with no rally better than 381sc up to the last half hour. The receipts were on the increase again and up to the estimates at 152 cars. The cut rates naturally acted against the market. This was espe cially true when the estimate for Monday was raised to 310 cars. On this the break to 38c occurred. January was quoted at 14%c, July 38%c, and the feeling was quite

Dispatches reporting only fifteen and wenty cars a day loading on several hundred miles of road in Iowa, where the average loadings are fifty to seventy-five cars a day, had little influence with the trade, in view of the big estimate for Monday. The trade in oats was unsettled, prices being slightly higher for a time, but after-wards easing off. The close was steady the same as vesterday for May. In the pork market the offerings were somewhat free, and prices started at 21/2c decline from yesterday's closing, followed by further drop of 5c without any support. I'wo or three orders then came in, when the market reacted to the opening price. Some strength was subsequently developed on the packers buying with a brief spell of activty, prices advancing 7½c, but ultimately dedining to that extent, one of those who had bought offering the market down, followed by an improvement of 21/2c. At the close the figures were the same as those at the same time yesterday. Lard was featureless and the market closed steady at 7.60c for May, an advance of .021/2c over the close of yesterday. Ribs, on very light buying, advanced .07%c for the day, May closing Estimated receipts for Monday are: Wheat, 75 cars; corn, 310; oats, 80; hogs, 33,000 head. Leading futures ranged as fol-

Health a Duty.

Perhaps nothing will so much hasten the time when body and mind will both be ad-duty. Few seem conscious that there is such a thing as physical morality. Men's habit-iberty to treat their bodies as they please.

Disorder entailed by disobedience to nature's dictates they regard as grievances, not as the effects of a conduct more or less flagitious. Though the evil consequence in-generations are often as great as those caused by crime, they do not think themselves in any degree criminal. It is true that in the case of drunkenness the viciousness of a bodily transgression is recognized but none appear to infer that if this bodily transgression is vicious, so, too, is every bodily transgression. The fact is, all breach-

We have nothing resembling in the least degree the Senate of the United States. The Senate counts for a great deal-our upper chamber counts for nothing except a little delay in passing inevitable legislation. The rules of neither branch of Congress are at all like ours. In Congress a stranger is taken onto the floor of the House. In the House of Commons ceipts, none; shipments, 200. There the very messengers dare not move beyond the recognized line of the bar. We employ market was very quiet at barely steady officials to do the best they can to prevent strangers from obtaining seats. The truth is we have not enough room for ourselves in the House of Commons and in the secret depths of our hearts we consider all strangers as intruders and nuisances, and we want to get rid of them the best way we

The Lord Chancellor is Speaker of the House of Lords, but he cannot decide on any question of order, not even as to which peer is to speak. He sits on a red bench called the wool sack. But the wool sack is not in the House of Lords technically speaking. If he desires to make a speech he must get off the wool sack and step a few paces aside and forward so as to be constitutionally and technically in the House of Lords.

The House of Commons alone, of all parliamentary bodies, has the practice of not providing seats enough for its own members to sit down in. You may be elected to the House of Commons by an overwhelming majority, and hand in your certificate of election and be introduced and sign the roll and be sworn in, but you have not got your seat-at least you have not got a place to sit down in. The House of Commons has 670 members, and it has seats for a little more than half that num ber. Members who have not got seats are to do the best they can, do anything short of taking seats in the House. They may crowd the bar-I do not mean any place of refreshment, though they do crowd that bar, too-if they please; I mean they may stand below the line which is supposed to represent the brass bar that can, when occasion requires, be drawn from either side and so conjoined as to represent the division between some petitioner, or some alleged offender and the House of Commons itself. They may stay in the newspaper room or the tax room; they may fall asleep in the library, or walk on the terrace, or lounge in the smoking room, but they cannot sit in the House.

M. P.'S WITHOUT SEATS. The struggle for seats from day to day is a curious and interesting competition, of which, so far as I know, the English House of Commons has an absolute monopoly. It is a question of first come first served. The House of Commons maets at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. A member may come down as early as he pleases and select a seat. If he comes as early as 8 o'clock in the morning he has on ordinary occasions a fair chance of a good place. He selects his place and puts his hat into it. Then he goes away to return at 3 o'clock, when prayers are said by the chaplain. In the meantime he must not stir one inch outside of the buildings which belong to the House of Commons If he is for one moment one inch outside the precinct of the House his seat is forfeited. So he spends from 8 o'clock until 3 lounging about the library and the smoking rooms and the newspaper room, and at a o'clock he comes back into the House to listen to prayers. Then he is entitled to insert in a little brass frame at the back of his seat a small card bearing the word "prayers" and his own name written be neath, and thus he has secured that seat for the one sitting only. The struggle has to begin afresh, on the very same condi-

There are certain men who are exempted from this struggle and from the necessity o listening to prayers. These are members of the government and the men who composed the former government. The front bench on the right belong to the members of the government; the front bench on the left is assigned by tradition and courtesy to the members of the late government. The members of the government and the late government are not compelled to be present when prayers are said, as a condition for securing their seats. Accordingly they are never present at prayers. The only members who never join in the prayers for the welfare of the sovereign and the security and prosperity of the State are the men who are now governing the State, and the men who were governing it the day before yesterday and are madly anxious to be governing again the day after to-morrow. The mo ment you mount up in the service of the State you cease to attend prayers as a matter of course. Why should a privy councillor pray? One might as well not be a privy councillor if a privy councillor had

DISORDERLY AND RUDE.

In every other parliamentary assembly that I know of each member has his recognized place which he holds till the end of the session. He has also a desk to write on. In the House of Commons there is no desk for any member, and the rule is that no man is to write a line, or take a note, or read a book or newspaper in the chamber, except for the actual purposes of debate. You may hold in your hand a newspaper clipping which you propose to use in your reply. But you must not write an ordinary letter, or glance for your own amusement at a book or newspaper. Men go out the moment an uninteresting speaker gets up, and hurry to the library or lobby to write letters. When the hour for the provincial or foreign post is arriving they rush out in a very stampede as if flying madly for their lives-striving to escape from a house on fire. I have never quite understood why the House of Commons should be considered a highly orderly assembly. My opinion that when it is not a dull assembly it is often very disorderly. The House of Commons is almost the noisiest and rudest legislative assembly with which I have any manner of personal acquaintance. I have heard debates on the reconstruction of the whole political system of France conducted in the French assembly with more quietude and more decorum than will be found in an ordinary discussion of the House of Commons when time for division is drawing near. The House of Representatives at Washington has always seemed to me a very respectable and decorous assembly. The Senate is the best second chamber have ever seen.

The one great guarantee of order in the House of Commons is the absolute deference to the authority of the Speaker. On the one momentous night in this session when there was a riot in the House, it happened when the House was in committee, and the chairman of ways and means presided, but the moment the Speaker mounted his chair the disturbance was over. That was a strange night. Not for two centuries at least had blows been interchanged on the floor of the House of Commons. The occupants of the strangers' gallery hissed-a portentous sound Never in the most exciting debates have I heard the occupants of the strangers' gallery give any expression of approval or disapproval. We are not like the one legislative chamber of Greece, where strangers in the galleries shout, yell, cheer and hiss and accompany every speaker on the floor with a perfect charivari of admiration or abhorance. In the House of Commons strangers are always well behaved and self-controlled. Their propriety of demeanor is all the more to be praised when we consider the sort of examples which they commonly get from the members of the Representative Chamber.
